

Caroline Chisholm Reserve

The line of plants as you walk in the reserve. Almost all look fairly healthy. Summer rains helped.

The far end of the reserve. Some plants have died but most are doing well.

This tree looked as if it had been stripped – maybe by roos or wallabies - but it appears to be coming back.

This is the first planting we did with the schoolkids. A miniature forest now.

Some people still think the entrance to the reserve is a rubbish dump.
